About Bali

Culture, unique arts and ceremonies, gentle friendly people and scenic beauty have maintained Bali as the top tourist destination in Asia for the past 10 years. Located just 8 degrees south of the equator in the heart of the Indonesian archipelago, Bali enjoys a perfect tropical climate. The island of Bali is a photographic delight with two volcanoes, reaching 3,014 meters high. There are lush tropical forests, pristine crater lakes, fast flowing rivers and deep ravines, terraced rice fields, and fertile fruit and vegetable plantations. The white sand beaches in the South and the black volcanic sand beaches in other parts of the island are enjoyed by visitors and locals alike.

Java

About Java

Of all the 17,000 islands that make up Indonesia, Java is king. It may not have the beaches of Bali, the jungles of Kalimantan, or the remoteness of Papua, but it's the heart of the country. Java dominates Indonesian social, political and economic life. With a population of 200 million and home to 60% of Indonesia's population, it is the world's most populous island, and one of the most densely populated regions in the world. The Indonesian capital city Jakarta is in west Java. Java lies between Sumatra to the west and Bali to the east and is divided into four provinces, West Java, Central Java, East Java, and Banten, with two special districts, Jakarta and Yogyakarta.

Flores Komodo

About Flores Komodo Island

Komodo, The very word conjures up thoughts of mystery and myth. A Jurassic world where rolling hillsides of savanna grassland meet long stretches of palm fringed beaches. A place where massive tectonic plateaus collide beneath the Flores Sea, driving rugged mountains skyward. Active volcanoes and the strong currents of the Lint Straits create giant whirl pools, guarding the island from the outside world. Great reptiles bathe in the sun as the sounds of exotic birds bring the dense forest to life. This island supports a limited number of plant and animal species, only those who have been able to adapt to this harsh environment have survived. This is the world of the Komodo Dragon, the island of Komodo, Indonesia.

Lombok

About Lombok

Part of West Nusa Tenggara, Lombok lies across the straits from Bali. Still unspoiled, it has some of the culture and arts of the Balinese and is easily accessible from Bali by sea or air. An island of 4,594 square km, Lombok was formerly a Kingdom with its capital Mataram. The population comprises the native Sasak whose main religion is Islam; the western part of the island is inhabited by Balinese, where the Hindu way of life prevails, complete with ancient temples. A popular tourist destination off the coasts of Lombok, the Gili Islands (or just the Gilis) are very relaxed and laid-back, with countless little beachside cafes serving up elaborate seafood buffets, fresh salads and good quality western and Asian food. All three islands feature superb, white sandy beaches, crystal clear water, spectacular coral reefs, and the best snorkeling and diving to be found anywhere between Bali and Lombok.

Sulawesi

About Sulawesi

Sulawesi, Indonesia's 3rd largest island is an island of cultural diversity ranging from the mysterious Toraja in the mountainous highlands, to the Makassarese and Bugis groups in the south and Minahassans (Menadonese) people in the north. Sulawesi offers the complete spectrum for the traveler with spectacular mountains, scenic coastline with white sand beaches and first class diving, the fascinating culture of the Toraja and dense jungles. Visit the region of Toraja, where their ancient customs and practices are renowned throughout the Indonesian archipelago. Seek out the Tau Tau statues and the hanging graves, then engage in the daily life of the Torajan people.

Borneo

About Borneo

Kalimantan Island (Borneo) lies on the equator with temperatures from 18°C up to 36°C in the lowland and 10°C up to 23°C in the mountain areas. The land is crossed by many rivers, which are the dominant means of transportation and commercial activities, although roads and motorways have also been built linking towns and villages. South Kalimantan has many special places of interest for visitors. The Barito Floating Market will give you enjoyable trips cruising the Martapura and Barito rivers. You can see how the local people live along the banks of the rivers. Early in the morning, by a traditional motor boat (Kelotok), see the biggest floating market in Kuin, taste local snacks and drinks at a floating restaurant. Cruise to Tanjung Harapan island and you can observe orangutans and other endemic faunas in their natural habitats along the way. Stop by Tanjung Puting National Park to see protected wildlife.
